Let's Start!

Diving in the deep blue sea is fun for you and me!

Learning Outcome

Describe detailed facts about events or actions in work and social contexts, in written or spoken situations.

Ask your partner:

- Have you ever been scuba diving and would you like to go? Why or why not?
- What types of things could you discover through scuba diving?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about geography, climate and environmental problems.
- I can speculate about past events.
- I can report facts about events and actions.

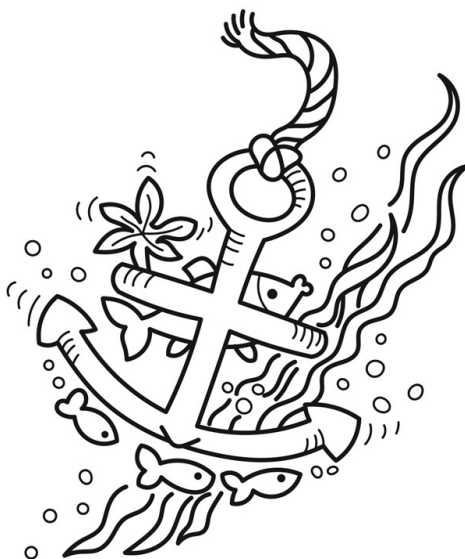

Let's Explore!

Let's so scuba diving!

* "Scuba" or S.C.U.B.A. stands for self-contained underwater breathing apparatus.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

I've been a scuba diver most of my life. Scuba diving, a wonderful way to explore the deep mysteries of the ocean, was also a way of assisting investigators to find the cause of plane crashes and sea accidents. That was my day job. We helped the investigators recover the sunken remains of a shipwreck or plane accident. We, the divers, uncovered those important pieces of evidence helping to determine the cause of the disaster. Our underwater searches had to cover a wide range of territory, and we often worked around the clock. The accident might have happened because of a mechanical failure, human error or mother nature's wrath.

The searches would have been slow due to bad weather. Also, the items we recovered might have needed to be lifted carefully with special equipment. We saw that the debris, waterlogged and heavy, might have easily broken apart, and it was always better to remove an item intact. I might have chosen a different career in another field, but I loved diving. I didn't need to have outside hobbies because I was contented.

One wreckage we discovered during an investigation of a plane crash was fascinating. The ship was old and contained cargo — real treasure including gold bars and jewels. It might have been from the early 1800s, but that wasn't easy to ascertain. The hull was so disintegrated that it was impossible to tell the type of boat it had been. Much to my disappointment, the authorities kept the gold bars and jewelry. That was the only time I might have taken a souvenir, but I did not. The remnants of that ship are safely locked away until their origin can be established.

Let's Practice!

Scuba divers can help investigate accidents in the ocean.

Instructions: Match a half from the left with one on the right to complete each sentence. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1. Scuba diving is a wonderful way to
2. Some scuba divers assist investigators
3. Divers uncovered pieces of evidence
4. The debris, waterlogged and heavy,
5. Remnants of ships

explore the mysteries of the ocean.

to find the cause of plane crashes and shipwrecks.

might have broken apart.

are usually safely locked away.

that helped determine the cause of the disaster.

Let's Practice!

This person might have chosen a different career, but he loves scuba diving!

Instructions: Organize the mystery sentences. Write the sentences correctly.

1. happened / failure. / might / mechanical / The / because / accident / have / of

2. weather. / been / to / slow / The / bad / due / have / would / searches

3. carefully. / The / have / be / might / lifted / items / needed / to

4. ship / The / from / might / the / been / 1800's. / have / early

5. I / a / the / have / That / only / might / souvenir. / time / was / taken

Extension Activity

Arrange a scuba diving expedition.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Find a place you would like to explore by scuba diving.
- Find out the cost of lessons and the gear you need.
- Look up the meaning and use of each gadget that you need.
- Write notes.
- Tell a friend about the information and convince her/him to come.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I research a place for scuba diving lessons.

I write down the meanings of words that talk about scuba diving gear.

I tell a friend about the scuba diving lessons, and I convince a friend to come with me.

Target Words

- sunken remains (noun): parts of something found at the bottom of a body of water e.g. We helped the investigators recover the sunken remains of a shipwreck or a plane accident.
- shipwreck (noun): destruction or sinking of a ship e.g. We helped the investigators recover the shipwreck.
- mother nature's wrath (noun): punishment or vengeance administered by nature
e.g. The accident might have happened because of mechanical failure, human error or mother nature's wrath.
- waterlogged (adjective): full of water
e.g. The debris, waterlogged and heavy, might have easily broken apart, and it was always better to remove the item intact.
- intact (adjective): complete and in the original state e.g. It was always better to remove the item intact.
- cargo (noun): goods carried by a ship, train or other vehicle e.g. The ship was old and contained cargo — real treasure including gold bars and jewels.
- to ascertain (verb): to discover or make certain e.g. It might have been from the early 1800s, but that wasn't easy to ascertain.
- hull (noun): the body or frame of a ship
e.g. The hull was so disintegrated that it was impossible to tell the type of boat it had been.
- disintegrated (adjective): broken into small pieces
e.g. The hull was so disintegrated that it was impossible to tell the type of boat it had been.

Speculating About the Past - A Review

You can use could have to speculate about past events. Specifically, you use it to speculate about scenarios different from what actually occurred.

May have and might have can be used to speculate about the past.

You can also use would have and didn't need to to speculate.

You use could have in the following situations:

1. to express past possibility

For example: He could have been a doctor if he had applied himself in school.

1. to express past uncertainty

For example: I'm not really sure who called. It could have been Rob, I guess.

You use may have to express past uncertainty.

For example: I suppose I may have been a bit tough on her.

You use might have to refer to a past possibility which did not occur.

For example: My goodness, you might have lost everything!

You use would have to express events that did not actually happen.

For example: I would have called you, but I didn't want to use up any more minutes on my cell.

You use didn't need to to express an unnecessary action that was not actually done.

For example: My computer was a bit slow, but fortunately it didn't need to be replaced.

Examples:

- The accident might have happened because of mechanical failure.
- I didn't need to have outside hobbies because I was contented.
- The searches would have been slow due to bad weather.

Relative Clauses: Omitting Relative Pronouns

There are two types of relative clauses: defining and non-defining.

Defining relative clauses give essential information to define or identify the person or thing we are talking about.

For example:

The man that Angela is talking to is her father.

The book that I read last week was very interesting.

Non-defining relative clauses tell us more about someone or something, but the information in these clauses does not help us to define what we are talking about.

For example:

The United States, which is a democratic nation, is a superpower.

Lady Diana, who everyone loved, had a tragic death.

In defining relative clauses, you often omit the relative pronoun when it is the subject of the clause.

For example:

The excuse he offered was unconvincing. (that/which is omitted)

Here,

He offered the excuse (subject + verb + object)

is

The excuse he offered (object + subject + verb)

Note: You cannot omit the relative pronoun when it is the subject of the clause.

~~The people were sitting at the back of the room couldn't see the stage.~~

The people who were sitting at the back of the room couldn't see the stage.

Examples:

- We, the divers, uncovered those important pieces of evidence helping determine the cause of the disaster.
- Also the items we recovered might have needed to be lifted carefully with special equipment.
- We saw that the debris, waterlogged and heavy, might have easily broken apart.
